1. The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the plane was the cold. It was a sharp contrast to the warm, humid air of the tropics. I had heard that the weather in the north was harsh, but I didn't realize just how cold it would be. The wind was biting, and the sun felt like a distant, weak light. I wrapped my coat around myself, feeling a sense of vulnerability. It was a strange feeling, being so exposed in a new environment. I had come here for a reason, but now I was questioning my decision. The landscape was unfamiliar, a vast expanse of white under a pale sky. I had never seen anything like this before. The silence was deafening, a heavy blanket that pressed down on me. I had heard that the north was a place of solitude, but I didn't expect it to be so empty. The only sounds were the occasional creak of a wooden structure or the distant howl of a wolf. It was a haunting melody that seemed to echo the loneliness of the place. I had come here seeking adventure, but now I was feeling a deep sense of isolation. The cold was not just a physical sensation; it was a metaphor for the emotional distance I felt from the world around me. I had come here to find myself, but now I was lost. The journey had been long and arduous, and I was beginning to regret the choices I had made. The cold was a constant reminder of my solitude, a stark contrast to the warmth of my home. I had come here for a reason, but now I was questioning my decision. The landscape was unfamiliar, a vast expanse of white under a pale sky. I had never seen anything like this before.
